ORLANDO, Fla., April 27, 2016 /PRNewswire-USNewswire/ -- The Invictus Games are coming to Orlando, Florida, and Wounded Warrior Project® (WWP) will be there to support the event and the competing wounded veterans. The Invictus Games are the only international adaptive sports competition for wounded, ill and injured active duty and retired servicemen and women. For years, WWP has funded organizations that share the WWP mission to honor and empower Wounded Warriors, and, this year, WWP is proud to be recognized as an official partner of the Invictus Games Orlando 2016. As part of this partnership, WWP will be providing bicycles that can be modified to meet the needs of the athletes participating in the cycling events as well as other technical support.

"At WWP, we understand the benefits that wounded veterans can experience when they live healthy and active lifestyles," said Maj. Gen. Charlie Fletcher, interim chief operating officer at WWP. "The power of sports can inspire recovery. By partnering with the Invictus Games Orlando 2016, WWP will be able to help generate a wider understanding and respect for injured service members and the challenges they face after combat. We are proud to partner with this amazing event and are excited by the competitive platform it provides injured service members. The Games give wounded warriors a chance to come together and demonstrate their amazing athleticism and determination."

From May 8-12, Orlando and ESPN Wide World of Sports Complex will host more than 500 competitors from 14 nations. Competitors will compete in archery, cycling, indoor rowing, power lifting, sitting volleyball, swimming, track and field, wheelchair basketball, wheelchair rugby, and wheelchair tennis.
