This will be the fourth year event organizer and long-time WWP supporter Rich Keenan has planned the event in his community.

"Wounded Warrior Project needs the support of people in the community," Rich said. "I'm proud to continue to host this event for an organization that does so much good for so many of our nation's wounded veterans."

The following day, wounded warrior Dan Nevins will host a yoga event at Heritage Park in Canton, just over 10 miles down the road. For years, Dan Nevins has used the transformative power of yoga to inspire others to live a life of physical health and wellness.

"For me, yoga helps me stay present in the present moment," Dan said. "I lived with the invisible wounds of war for years. I learned to cope with those wounds – yoga taught me how to heal, so there's nothing left to cope with. Yoga has given me the freedom to not have my past affect my future."
