

Wounded Warrior Project Renews Support for Organization Providing Free Reunions to Military Units

WASHINGTON, Aug. 28, 2019 /PRNewswire/ -- Wounded Warrior Project® (WWP) renewed its partnership with Warrior Reunion Foundation \(WRF\), an organization that provides free reunions to units that deployed together. These opportunities rebuild essential peer support networks based on shared experiences while connecting veterans with actionable resources to support their transition needs.

This $20,000 grant will support a reunion and give service members and Gold Star Families a chance to heal together.

"Military life is intense and team-focused, and the spirit of camaraderie and fellowship it creates is hard to find in the civilian world," said WWP CEO Lt. Gen. (Ret.) Mike Linnington. "Through service, and especially during war, many veterans form very tight bonds and become family to each other. These connections and peer-to-peer support are important to maintain as warriors transition out of the military. That's why we're proud to recommit our support to Warrior Reunion Foundation's efforts to build community, increase resilience, and reduce isolation."

"Wounded Warrior Project has supported us from the very early stages of our mission," said James Ferguson, CEO and founder of Warrior Reunion Foundation. "Our reunions have reconnected over 400 combat veterans. We are proud to partner with Wounded Warrior Project to expand the impact of our reunion program, ensuring many more that served in combat together have the opportunity to reunite, remember, and recover with their brothers and sisters in arms."
